

Breakdown:

Blake (the epitome of masculine) and Collette (the epitome of feminine) are one week away from tying the knot. They love each other more than anything in the world, but not unlike most relationships they still have their troubles. Blake is a "fixer" and not always a great listener. When he hears a problem, his instinct is to solve it. Collette is an amazing listener, and sometimes just wants to be heard and not "fixed". So while these two are madly in love and only a week away from becoming husband and wife, they still have their disagreements.

8.

INT. BUTCHER SHOP - LATER

Blake waits for his order when he sees a special on baby back ribs. The butcher puts the roast on the counter. Blake looks back and forth between the roast and the succulent ribs.

INT. HOUSE - DAY

Colette walks in the front door and is immediately greeted by Lizzy the dog. She sniffs the air, something smells off. She follows the smell which leads her out the back door.

EXT. BACKYARD - CONTINUOUS

She finds Blake in an apron, barbecuing up a storm. He's drinks and marinates luscious racks of baby back ribs.

COLETTE

What's going on?

BLAKE

Helping.

COLETTE

I love you but this is not helping.
This isn't what I asked you to do.

BLAKE

You said you were too busy to cook.

COLETTE

I said I didn't have time to pick up the roast. And these are ribs!

↑
FYI ONLY
↓

START

BLAKE

I knew what you meant, and honey everybody loves ribs.

COLETTE

My parents aren't "ribs" people.

DING DONG - Loud, rambunctious voices boom through the house.

COLETTE

Why are your brothers here?

BLAKE

They wanted to see the new headers on the Mustang. And they love ribs.

Blake points to the open garage where we find a gorgeous '67 convertible Mustang up on blocks. Blake smiles confidently and gives Colette a big hug.

COLETTE

There aren't enough place settings.

BLAKE

They've been working really hard to have the car ready for the wedding, least we can do is feed them.

Blake and Collette stare at one another, clearly this argument will need to be continued later as company has arrived. They both quickly change frustration with one another to forced smiles.

END